

Second Draft 4 April 1947

Approved For Release 2002/10/10 : CIA-RDP90-00610R000100090048-9

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee: My appearance before your Committee this morning is in support of Section 202 of the proposed National Security Act of 1947. This section of the bill provides the United States for the first time in our history, with a central intelligence service created by act of Congress. Our present organization, the Central Intelligence Group which I have the privilege of directing heading -- has been in existence since January, 1946, by authority of an Executive Directive of the President.

Since the day that the Central Intelligence Group was established, the Directors of Central Intelligence -- my predecessor and I -- have looked forward to the time when we could come before the Congress, and request that we be given permanent status through legislative enactment. That day has arrived. I urge adoption of this section of the bill. The United States must have an intelligence service second to none. In order to perform our share in maintaining the national security in times of peace, to be forewarned against possible acts of aggression, to be armed against prepared for disaster in an atomic age, we must have full knowledge of the intentions and capabilities of the other nations and ~~explosive forces of the world.~~ We had broken the great secret Japanese codes.

I know ~~that~~ you gentlemen understand that the nature of some of the work ~~the intelligence~~ are doing makes it undesirable -- from the standpoint of security -- ~~we are doing makes it impossible for us to talk freely on the record regarding~~ to discuss certain activities with too much freedom.

activities. I feel that the people of this country, having experienced the disaster

Approved For Release 2002/10/10 : CIA-RDP90-00610R000100090048-9

of Pearl Harbor and the horrors of a global war, are now sufficient

Director's Testimony Before Senate Intelligence Committee - 1 - On S. 758,
Second Draft - 4 April 1947

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee: My appearance before your Committee this morning is in support of Section 202 of the proposed National Security Act of 1947. This section of the bill provides the United States for the first time in our history, with a central intelligence service created by act of Congress. Our present organization, the Central Intelligence Group which I have the privilege of heading -- has been in existence since January 1946, by authority of an Executive Directive of the President.

Since the day that the Central Intelligence Group was established, the Directors of Central Intelligence -- my predecessor and I -- have looked forward to the time when we could come before the Congress, and request that we be given permanent status through legislative enactment. That day has arrived. I strongly urge adoption of this section of the bill. The United States must have an intelligence service second to none. In order to perform our share in maintaining the national security in times of peace, to be forewarned against possible aggression, to be forewarned should disaster come in an atomic age, we must have full knowledge of the intentions and capabilities of the other nations and explosive areas of the world.

I know that you gentlemen understand that the nature of the intelligence work we are doing makes it impossible to discuss it freely on the record regarding